Shared Soils, Shared Solutions: Soil, Water and Climate Resilience in Latin America

SS Reddy, Advisor (Agriculture), DAKSHIN

Latin America's agriculture is increasingly shaped by climate-induced stress on soil and water systems, placing the biophysical foundations of food production and rural livelihoods under growing pressure. Prolonged droughts, erratic rainfall, rising temperature extremes, shifting precipitation regimes, soil degradation and declining water availability are increasingly shaping agro-ecosystem performance across the region. These challenges are particularly acute in rainfed, highland, coastal and dryland systems, where agriculture is largely driven by small and fragmented landholdings.

Recent India-Ethiopia South-South Cooperation

Prime Minister of Ethiopia Abiy Ahmed and Prime Minister of India Narendra Modi announced a new status for bilateral relations following joint talks. The main decision was the transition from historical interaction to strategic partnership. During the meetings, the parties signed a number of agreements and agreed to increase humanitarian assistance. The signed package included an agreement on mutual administrative assistance on customs matters, a memorandum on the establishment of a data processing centre at the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and a memorandum on cooperation in UN peacekeeping missions. Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed recalled the historical ties on which the new partnership is built.
